INTELLICENCE HIGHLIGHTS NO. 55 8 June - 14 June 1949

SECTION I. SUMMARY OF FAR EAST TRENDS AND DEVELOPMENTS

US attempts to gain international status for Japan suffered another setback when the Paris ITU conference voted against seating the Japanese delegation (p. 2).

The YOSHIDA Government appears to be planning a purge of leftist union members in government employ in the course of impending SCAP-ordered mass dismissals (p. 2).

The fairly serious and protracted border clash in isolated Ongjin peninsula, while presently quiescent, has led to a weakening of the Republic of Korea's security forces (p. 3).

The shift of CCP "soldier-heros" CFEN and LIU from combat commands to administrative tasks in the Yangtze valley may indicate that the Chinese Communists are becoming more concerned with future peace than present warfare (p. 4). Meanwhile, the reenforcement of the Nationalist position in Taiwan by troops evacuated from the mainland has compounded the confusion there and Communist infiltration of the island continues (p. 5).

While Bao Dai still faces problems in the selection of his cabinet. French militarists and colonials in Indochina continue to hope for a vigorous suppression campaign which will restore firm French control (p. 6).

The unexpected resignation of Senator Tanada from the Quirinista faction of the Liberal Party during the recent convention may further weaken Quirino's position in the November presidential race (p. 7).

The marginal notations used in succeeding sections of this Weekly ("A", "B", or "C") indicate the importance of the items in B/FE opinion with "A" representing the most important.

SECTION II. DEVELOPMENTS IN SPECIFIED AREAS

GENERAL

TTU membership for Japan blocked—The US received another major set—back in its attempts to gain full international status for Japan on 10 June when the Paris conference of the International Telecommunications Union voted 24 to 23 (with 7 abstentions) against seating the Japanese Government delegation. This action followed previous conference efforts to admit SCAP representatives as observers and Japanese delegation members as technicians, a status which the US could not accept without abandoning its position that Japan was entitled to full rights of ITU membership. To avoid compromising this position further, the SCAP representatives will now attach themselves to the US delegation, and the Japanese members will not participate.

Despite the fact that Japan was admitted to full membership in the ITU without opposition at the plenary session of the conference in Atlantic City in 1947, France, as host nation, refused last April to extend an invitation to Japan on the grounds that SCAP's approval of Japanese membership was first subject to consideration by the Far Eastern Council (FEC). The Commonwealth nations generally supported this view, questioning not only the legality of SCAP's authority over Japan's external affairs, but expressing concern over US attempts to "shortcircuit" the FEC. The US held that Japanese participation in internetional affairs was necessary for proper development of responsible government in Japan, and that in the absence of specific FEC policy or US directive, SCAP had acted within its broad executive power provided by the "Basic Post-Surrender Policy". It is this view which was opposed by the 10 June conference vote. That the Commonwealth nations were strongly opposed to the US view presages difficulties in implementing the policy of progressive Japanese resumption of international responsibilities pending peace treaty negotiations and emphasizes once again the conflict bitween the national interests of the US and its Western allies in the Pacific. That the Soviet Satellite bloc was surprisingly quiet on the question of Japan's participation indicates the probability that the USSR is wary of nullifying the propaganda effect of its recent peace treaty proposal for Japan.

to eliminate "subversives" on its payrolls by proposing that all "un-Japanese" Government officials be among those subject to mass dismissal. According to unofficial definition, "un-Japanese" Government employees are: (1) persons disloyal to the Japanese Constitution and the Government and (2) persons who "maliciously engage in destructive incitation." The Government action undoubtedly contemplates a campaign against trade union elements among Government workers, specifically those, strongly Communist-influenced, which in the past have contributed to strike threats in key Government-operated industries.

The interest of the conservative YOSHIDA Government in affecting such a purge has been indicated for some time. The dangers of infringing rights guaranteed by Japanese law and of overriding opposition political objections, as well as avoiding damage to SCAP-instituted reforms, have proved insurmountable to date. However much SCAP may sympathize with the removal of unstabilizing elements in the Japanese Government service, Occupation authorities will scrutinize with care suggested Japanese procedures for possible violation of Occupation objectives.

FOREA

Border clashes continue—Following the withdrawal of US border troops along the 38th Parallel in January 1949, incidents have continued at an accelerated rate and on a larger scale. A major engagement in the Kaesong area, 30 miles north of Seoul, in early May has been followed by a longer battle on the Ongjin peninsula, involving a reported 2,400 Korcan Army personnel, 800 National Folice, and 1,000 north Korcan troops. Action continued at intermittent intensity for more than two weeks and has now diminished to sporadic raids, while north Korcan forces still hold a salient south of the 38th Parallel.

The Korsan Republic cannot maintain the defenses of the Ongjin peninsula against strong attack because the area can be supplied from the south only by sea. Despite this obvious tactical disadvantage and the warnings of US advisors, over 1,500 troops were dispatched to reinforce the Ongjin garrison when fighting developed. The Korean Government's determination not to yield an inch of sacred soil, if adhered to in other areas as untenable as Ongjin, could eventually result in a serious weakening of the security forces presently deployed in good defensive alignment along the principle corridors between Secul and the border.

It is usually impossible to determine whether a specific border incident has been precipitated by northern or southern action and most of the continuing incidents appear to have only local significance. There is no question, however, but what border incidents have a definite part in the overall northern Korean plan for neutralization of southern Korea's capacity to resist. Border raids and battles are designed probably to accomplish the following northern Korean objectives:

(1) to test the capabilities of southern defenses; (2) to disorganize and disperse defense concentrations along the two main invasion routes into southern Korea; (3) to force a concentration of Korean security forces along the 38th Parallel, leaving the Republic's interior exposed to guerrilla activity; (4) to maintain an atmosphere of fear in southern

Korea; (5) to give combat experience to northern Korean troops; and

(6) to forestall an invasion of the north,

CHINA

CCP command shuffle—The recent assignment of leading Communist military figures to high political positions may indicate that the Communist High Command now believes the military phase of the revolution is all but finished and of less importance than political and economic aspects of a peaceful future. Appointments of top-rank commanders CHEN Yi and LIU Po-cheng to senior positions in Shanghai and Nanking, appear normal and logical since these sectors must of necessity operate under martial law for the present. While additionally reflecting the known Communist lack of accomplished administrators, these appointments also reflect a desire to exploit the vast prestige of these leaders and in some degree to reward them for past accomplishments. The Communist Party may also wish to separate these tremendously popular soldier-heroes from direct command of their combat troops.

CHEN and LIU are expected to remain in charge of the lower Yangtze valley at least through the consolidation stage. In view of the need for trade, the Communists also may have decided to exploit these leaders' reputation for being native-minded Communists, relatively tolerant of the West. While unity of political and military policy in the lower Yangtze valley thus is assured, the region may well emerge as a semi-independent entity under CHEN and LIU, taking only general direction from central Communist headquarters.

For this purpose both men are excellent choices and each has demonstrated considerable past administrative ability in organizing military governments in his respective area during the period when military control from Yenan was loose and generalized. Since they remain available for the planning stages of any new operations, moreover, their absence from active command will probably not detract materially from future military successes on the part of such leaders as PENG Teh-huai, LIN Piao and MIEH Jung-chen, who retain their combat commands.

Commist infiltration of Taiwan-Unile the Nationalists successfully evacuated elements of at least eight armies from Shanghai and Tsingtao to Taiwan, uping the island's total troops to at least 100,000, there is reason to doubt Nationalist ability to derive any great benefit from this concentration of strength. Recent reports indicate that Communist inciltration of the island is already underway. Communist radio preparada aimed at Taiwan, promising the Taiwanese "liberation" from Nationalist oppression, is reportedly receipt with "some success". The CCF is also said to be buying over provincial officials, particularly police. In addition, a US official on the island was recently advised against traveling on the eastern coast of the island because of the prosence of numerous armed dissidents there.

Mationalist Covernor CHEN Cheng reportedly has little first-land knowledge of what is actually respening on Taiwan. There is a wide-spread lack of stability among Mationalist political organs and disconsion is rife in regular troop units, as well as in the Air Force and the Navy. Evacuated troops from Shanghai and Tsingted clog the parts and present a staggering calleting problem in the already over-crowded island. Poor and discriminatory pay, miscrable leadership and low morale cause some officials to express "great worry" concerning continued troop loyalty.

Dithin the flustered Nationalist ranks on Taiwan there is, as yet, no clearly crystallized determination to fight the Communists. The eventual emergence of such a determination remains problematic. Although Foldon, just opposite Taiwan on the mainland, is already Communisting'ested in its western parts all Moochow and Amoy, its rajor ports, are threatened, the likelihood of direct Communist military assault on Taiwan is still remote. CHIANN Kai-shek, therefore, will probably be able to retain control of the island at least through 1949 but, over a longer period, his prospects of withstanding Communist explainstation both of Nationalist confusion and of deep-seated Taiwanese opposition to his regime are very poor.

CON restores Yangtze valley transport. The CCP's swift respending of limited transportation facilities in the Yangtze valley may permit a revival of commerce in the newly occupied area and, by permitting shipments of rice, cotton, coal and export commodities, may bring Shanghai some measure of temporary economic relief. Restoration of Shanghai's industry and commerce, however, depends upon an adequate fuel supply for the Shanghai Power Company, among other things, and

#g

the Fower Company presently uses oil for fuel. Although any oil shortage could be partly alleviated by reconversion to coal, the Communists probably cannot transport enough coal to maintain full power generation in Shanghai except by the movement of North China's coal by means of chartered foreign vessels.

The few river vessels left behind by the Nationalists in Shanghai and other ports on the Yangtze River began a Shanghai-Hankow run on 3 June and two more scheduled runs were soon established. Overland transport in the lower valley, chiefly on the Tientsin-Pukow and Nanking-Shanghai railroad lines, has been brisk. Small amounts of Huminan coal have been rushed to Hanking and Shanghai, as well as larger shipments of rice and edible oils from Wuhsi end other rice markets in the Yangtze delta. The Peiping-Hankow railroad is not yet open to through traffic but a section in Honan province north of Hankow should be in operation soon, as should the Hangahow-Nanchang section of the Chekiang-Kiangsi railroad.

Bao Dat's problems—Bao Dai arrived in Saigon on 13 June from Dalat to prepare plans for an exchange of letters between himself and French High Commissioner Pignon and possibly to announce his cabinet as well as arrange a trip to Hue and Hanoi. There appears to be a misunder—standing between Pignon and the influential Governor of Cochinchina, Tran-van-Huu, as to the timing of the Bao Dai cabinet announcement. Planon expects this action to take place before Bao Dai's visit to the north, but Huu believes that it may be postponed pending further consideration of the cabinet's composition. Huu's view appears the more likely, since the personal fouds, jeslousies, and ambitions of various political leaders are giving Bao Dai serious difficulty in the choice of ministers. In this connection, Bao Dai is assiduously courting certain "moderate" resistance elements for inclusion in his government.

Despite high Commissioner Pignon's efforts to implement the Bac Dai plan as rapidly as possible, French colonial "diehards"have revived the hope of crushing the resistance by military force and thus reimposing effective French colonial control over all Indochina.

and suggests employment of guerrilla methods as the best strategy for restoration of Indochina to a "peaceful, prewar status" under French domination. While other military officials are almost unanimous in desiring the ultimate return of complete French authority, they differ as to the best military strategy under the circumstances. It is apparent, therefore, that Bao Dai's many problems in activating his proposed regime will be aggravated by sabotage on the French administrative level and his prospects of eventual success still appear to be very poor.

PHILIPPINES

Quirino nominated for presidency—The Quirinista faction of the Liberal Party held its convention on 11 June and, as expected, unanimously nominated President Quirine as Party candidate for the presidency. The convention failed to agree on a vice-presidential nominee and adjourned on 12 June after resolving to let Quirino himself choose his running—mate. The problem of selecting the 8-man senatorial slate was shunted to the Party's executive committee.

Jose Yulo is now considered to be Quirino's probable choice. Yulo, a prewar Speaker of the House, was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in the Japanese puppet government and is a prominent landowner and corporation lawyer. His price is high: Quirino has told the US Ambassador that, in return for accepting the vice-presidency, Yulo wishes to be concurrently Secretary of Finance and have a free hand in shaping the Government's plans for economic development.

Ferhaps the most significant political development at the convention was Senator Tanada's dramatic and unexpected resignation from the Liberal Party. Tanada, who has an excellent record and has wiged an aggressive fight in the Senate for homest government, had been asked by President Quirino to deliver the convention's keynote address. In two letters released to the public on 12 June, Tanada refused to deliver the address, accused House Speaker Eugenio Perez (President of the Liberal Party) of benefitting financially from the Chinese immigration quota system and charged Quirino with having given his approval to the sale of quotas. Tanada denounced the Liberal Party campaign for a "clean, honest, and efficient government" as a "piece of hardened oynicism". Both Quirino and Perez immediately denied the charges. Although the full effect of Tanada's resignation upon election politics cannot yet be determined, it is contain to result in additional votes for Laurel who has been posing as an honest and efficient servant of the people.

Election prepartions—Although the dominant Labor Party's campaign has not yet fully begun, it will commence in earnest at the close of the current legislative session which is expected about 1 July. Labor Party leaders are presently occupied with the selection of candidates and the determination of a platform to be presented at the annual conference which will be held in the near future. The Party appears to have not difficulty in reaching a decision on such controversial issues as the support of incentive wage payments as a means of increasing production, the suppression of Communist activity and the course of action should the Government lose the bank nationalization case, now pending decision by the Privy Council.

In addition, Labor Party leaders are faced with dissention among their their followers, growing from a feeling that some leaders have lost touch with their labor background. As an example, two left-wing Cabinet members, E. J. Ward and Donald Cameron-both of whom have recently less influence in the Labor Party-appear to be leading a "back-to-labor" movement with the support of left-wing unions and Communists. Ward lately incurred the wrath of Labor Party officials by openly cordenning the Government's immigration program and was publicly rebuked by Frime Minister Chifley. Nevertheless, Wardwas probably voicing the fears of a considerable section of labor which remains antagonistic to competition by immigrant workers.

Meanwhile, the Liberal and Country parties are still deadlocked in their efforts to merge and present a unified opposition in the coming general election. The principal barrier is still the state of Victoria, where an attempted Liberal-Country Party coalition failed to win the cooperation of all elements of the former Country Party.
